risk profiling

definition

Risk profiling is performance benchmarking and data analysis of health, safety and environmental risks.

purpose

The achievement of a complete OHS and business risk profile that highlights key areas of loss, with identification of non-compliant areas. This will aid in the development of a business improvement and sustainability plan.

features

Business performance benchmarking provides a snapshot of key safety risks that are impacting on business performance.

We do that by:

- Gap analysis;
- Benchmarking to industry;

- Analysing data to determine key areas of risk;
- Identifying sources of potential business loss;
- Identifying opportunities for improvement;
- Discussion with key organisational employees;
- Review of documentation.

outcome

Current health, safety and environmental risk controls will be verified as appropriate. Non-compliant risk controls will be identified and recommendations made for future treatment.

The result - a sustainable future for your business.
